August 2, 2021 – Jenny Flood and Amy Schade of Trius Federal Credit Union earned the Certified Credit Union Executive (CCUE) designation as a member of the graduating class of CUNA Management School, which was held July 12-21, 2021.

“On behalf of Credit Union National Association, I want to congratulate Jenny and Amy on completing the substantial undertaking that is CUNA Management School,” said James Carrick, vice president of blended learning at CUNA. “Over the three year program, they have mastered the art of credit union leadership, proven their capacities as an executive and developed a unique, clear vision for success. I look forward to seeing how they will transform the movement.”

CUNA Management School prepares attendees for roles as credit union leaders through three years of projects, activities, examinations and expert instruction. Studying under professors from the University of Wisconsin School of Business, participants learn about an enormous range of topics, including management, financials, internal controls, crisis management and organizational behavior.

By completing all three years of the school, three exams, two projects and an oral presentation, attendees earn the Certified Credit Union Executive (CCUE) designation, which signifies knowledge of and readiness for credit union leadership. Jenny and Amy were part of the 78 attendees to graduate with a designation this year.
